

BRP CAN-AM

We could have seen this coming. So many Can-Am Spyder owners were building their own touring versions that Bombardier Recreation Products decided to get in on the act. And BRP did it right. Check out the brand-new Can-Am Spyder RT (roadster touring) that everyone was asking for. And by the time you read this a RoadBike staffer will have already ridden, evaluated, and shot images of one for an upcoming issue. The Can-Am Spyder RT roadster is powered by a Rotax 998cc V-twin engine with Electronic Throttle Control optimized for touring. The RT features the same tried and true BOSCH-engineered vehicle stability system (VSS) as found in the Spyder RS sport roadster, which includes antilock brakes, traction control, and stability control systems.

A quick check of the spec sheet shows RT on-vehicle storage ability of 155 liters. That's a combination of 58 liters up front, 26 liters in each side hardbag, 43 liters in the top case, and 2 liters in the glove box. Now as the infomercial always says, "But wait! There's more!"

BRP is also introducing an industry first, optional matching RT622 trailer package, providing an additional 622 liters (22') of storage, designed specifically for the Spyder RT roadster and compatible with the vehicle's stability system. The Spyder RT roadster will be available for trial at authorized Can-Am dealerships this fall. Consumers currently have the option to preorder Premier Edition Spyder RT-S roadsters for delivery in the fourth quarter of 2009.
